MISTER KEAZLE S EPITAPH Foster the tinker traversed Maine From Elkinstown to Kittery Point, With a rattling pack and a rattling brain, And a general air of out of joint. A gaunt old chap with a shambling gait, A battered hat, and rusty clothes, With grimy digits in sorry state, And a smooch on the end of his big red nose. That was the way that Foster went, -- Mixture of shrewdness and folly blent, Mending the pots and the pans as ordered, But leaving the leak in his nob unsoldered. But Foster the tinker was no one s fool; He fired an answer every time. T was either a saw or proverb or rule, Or else a bit of home-made rhyme. And while he knocked at a pot or a pan And puffed the coals of his little blaze, He was ready and...
