The Cossacks of the Volga were at that time an unruly set of people and under the leadership of two hetmans, Jermak Timofjejeff and Ivan Kolzo, and three other leaders, did much injury to the Asiatic caravan trade and consequently to Russian commerce, besides being the terror of their own neighbors--the nomadic peoples of the steppes. The Strogonoffs being as clear headed as they were wealthy, then offered these highway robber Cossacks honorable service with them in carrying out their own plans. They wrote friendly letters to them; urged upon them that they, as they were the children of the White Czar, should carry on a nobler work than that which they were in the habit of doing, and concluded by asking them as Christians to help them protect the land from the infidels and unbelievers. Jermak and his companions, hoping to again secure the favor of the Czar, accepted the invitation and came to the Strogonoffs with 500 well-armed warriors. Given supreme control of the Strogonoff forces, Jermak increased its strength by enlisting the services of Russians, Tartars, Lithuanians and Germans, and then went to work in good earnest. He led his forces across the Ural, forgetting that he then left the Strogonoff possessions quite unprotected. The result was that the neighboring tribes took advantage of this rare opportunity, invaded the district of the Kama, destroyed many villages and ports of the Strogonoffs and killed many Christians....
