Joe s face, as he stood and pondered a minute, was a silent exposition of an emphatic-- I knowed it! From that glove to the weary, deep-lined features he looked sagaciously, finishing with a couple of nods worthy of Lord Eldon, and a long-drawn breath representing an inaudible whistle. Then he stepped cautiously away, closed the door, went outside the window, and treated a pair of visionary dogs going through an imaginary fight on a flower-bed to such a torrent of loud-tongued abuse, that when he returned to Mr. Dasent s study (troubled en route by a dreadful choking) his knock was promptly answered, his master wide awake, and the tell-tale glove nowhere in sight! Joe s orders were brief: to have the T-cart ready by half-past eleven; to see the gates at each end of the Heath, as the Dasents eighty acres of park were always called, were open, ready for the wedding-carriages either way. An I m to take you up at the church, sir? asked Joe. Wait for me here, said his master curtly, not choosing to explain that from the church party he should be missing. And breakfast, sir? Can wait till I come. On which Joe went off, imbued with a certain fellow-feeling for his master. These here weddin s is nasty things, thought he, cept you make werry sure you ve got a hold of the right couple! For the life of me I can t see what need...
