THE reader must imagine a narrow and secluded valley, for the opening scene of this tale. The time was that in which the day loses its power, casting a light on objects most exposed, that resembles colors seen through glass slightly stained; a peculiarity of the atmosphere which, though almost of daily occurrence in summer and autumn, is the source of constant enjoyment to the real lover of nature. The hue meant is not a sickly yellow, but rather a soft and melancholy glory, that lends to the hill-side and copse, to tree and tower, to stream and lawn, those tinges of surpassing loveliness that impart to the close of day its proverbial and soothing charm. The setting sun touched with oblique rays a bit of shaven meadow that lay in a dell so deep as to owe this parting smile of nature to an accidental formation of the neighboring eminences; a distant mountain crest that a flock had cropped and fertilized; a rippling current that glided in the bottom; a narrow beaten path, more worn by hoof than wheel; and a vast range of forest that swelled and receded from the view, covering leagues of a hill-chase that even tradition had never peopled. The spot was seemingly as retired as if it had been chosen in one of our own solitudes of the wilderness, while it was, in fact, near the centre of Europe, and in the sixteenth century. But notwithstanding the absence of dwellings and all the other signs of the immediate presence of man, together with the wooded character of the scene, an American eye would not have...
