The French were very enterprising in conciliating and making treaties with the Indians all the way down to Louisiana. Their first act of aggression was as early as 1753, but matters did not become serious in the way of fighting until 1754. In the latter year Governor Dinwiddie, of Virginia, made an appeal to the other Colonies for help to repel French aggression. To that appeal North Carolina made characteristic answer by voting twelve thousand pounds, and mustering a regiment for the service. In regard to this contribution, Governor Dinwiddie, writing to Mr. Hanbury in London, May 10th, 1754, said, Except North Carolina, not one of the other colonies has granted any supplies, and it appears from a letter of Governor Dobbs to Pitt, 22d December, 1758, that out of pounds raised in the Province, had been given to assist the other provinces.
